Summary of Findings

• Throughout its history—from slavery, to Jim Crow, to the Bracero guest worker program, and into the present day—the United States has used and exploited the labor of marginalized communities of color, and their children, to grow food.

• The federal minimum age to work full-time in the agricultural industry is only 12 years old, the age of a sixth grader, while in most other industries, the federal minimum age to work full-time is 16, the age of a tenth grader.

• Approximately 330,000 children under the age of 16, including over 80,000 children under the age of 10, are child farmworkers in the United States.

• Neither the U.S. Department of Labor nor the U.S. Census Bureau collects data on the demographics of agricultural workers in the U.S., but researchers estimate that over 90% of farmworkers in the United States are persons of color—roughly 83% of farmworkers are Hispanic, 7% are Haitian, 6% are Indigenous, and 3% are African American.

• Approximately 33 children are injured on farms every day, and a child dies in a farm accident once every three days in the United States. Although only 6% of child workers in the United States are employed on farms, more than half of child work-related deaths are in agriculture.

• Since 2000, children have been killed in farm-related accidents in at least 49 states.

• Our new survey of the laws of the 50 states, D.C., and Puerto Rico show:
  • 22 states have no minimum age to work in agriculture.
  • 14 states, D.C., and Puerto Rico have raised the minimum age to work in agriculture to age to 14.
  • All 50 states have laws protecting children from work more than 8 hours a day, but 25 states and D.C. set no limit on the amount of hours in a day a child farmworker under 16 can work in the fields.
  • 35 states and D.C. allow children under 16 to work 7 days a week in the fields.
  • 15 states and Puerto Rico have laws that say children can only work 6 days in a week.
  • All 50 states have laws protecting children from working at night, but 23 states fail to protect child farmworkers under those laws.
  • All 50 states give employers fines for violating child labor laws, but 15 states make that fine $500 or less for the first offense. Indiana, has the lightest penalty for an initial violation of state child labor laws: a warning letter.
Approximately 33 children are injured on farms every day, and a child dies in a farm accident once every three days in the United States.

The federal minimum age to work full-time in the agricultural industry is only 12 years old, while in most other industries, the federal minimum age to work full-time is 16.
Introduction

—Child farmworker, North Carolina

As the country has evolved from a largely agrarian society, and our population increasingly lives in urban centers, Americans have become mostly agriculturally illiterate, disconnected from their food, with a widening gap between farm and table. But as a rise in globalization began to awaken consumers’ consciousness of exploitative foreign labor practices that have a hand in creating the goods on which we depend — from clothing and sneakers, to mining and electronics. Domestically we have seen recent protests against companies like Wayfair for furnishing child migrant detention facilities, and Chipotle for contracting with vendors who violate OSHA rights. However, one domestic industry — agriculture — has been largely overlooked, and the children who work the fields and farms across the United States go unnoticed harvesting fruits and vegetables, tending land, raising livestock, cultivating crops, and feeding the nation.

For many white communities in this country, family farming has been a strong tradition. The farming community has long prided itself on values of independence and self-reliance and passing down that same strong work ethic to their children and future generations. But that image betrays a history of racist terror and exploitation. The agricultural system that once depended on the subjugation of African Americans now increasingly exploits impoverished Brown and Black migrant workers. The one constant has been relying on vulnerable communities of color to feed a country that turns a blind eye to them and the dangers they face.

Today, child farmworkers are among the most vulnerable workers in our country. The horrors of work conditions in the Industrial Revolution inspired a children’s rights movement and restrictions on child labor, child farmworkers have been largely exempt due to outdated exemptions from over 80 years ago.

As a result, under federal law, children as young as 12-years-old may be legally employed unlimited hours in the hot sun, exposed to heat, chemicals, and hazardous machinery, risking serious injury, illness, or death. With poor safety regulations and limited enforcement, children are exposed to health risks that may affect them for the rest of their lives. The average farmworker family income is extremely low, and most migrant farmworkers live in extreme poverty, forcing their children to work to supplement incomes, especially where they are paid by the piece. This perpetuates a cycle where families are kept in poverty for generations because the proven paths out — fair pay and a quality education — are too often out of reach.

Employers today benefit from employing children for the same reasons they have for centuries because they can pay children less, and they know that vulnerable communities, and especially children in vulnerable communities, are less likely to unionize and strike. With weak protections in child labor laws, and limited enforcement and low penalties for violating those laws, there is little incentive for employers to comply. And as opposed to pressure against individual corporations, it is nearly impossible to get the country to boycott entire goods. As labor leader and civil rights activist Dolores Huerta said while organizing with The United Farm Workers Association, “How do I stop eleven million people from buying the grapes?”

The solution is strong labor laws that are meaningfully enforced.

To that end, in 2021, Lawyers for Good Government (L4GG) partnered with the Child Labor Coalition and L4GG’s network of pro bono attorneys to conduct a survey of child labor laws across 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. The survey investigated state laws regarding age and hour restrictions, wages, safety requirements, penalties, and other child labor regulations. The purpose of this report is to share the findings of that research and recommend a model policy for state and local advocates to keep safe the vulnerable children who work across their states.

America’s Agricultural Child Labor Laws Developed Because of America’s History with Race

Many histories of child labor in the United States center the labor movement in the industrial North, while often ignoring America’s history of exploiting people of color in the agricultural industry. Before and after the Thirteenth Amendment’s abolition of slavery on paper, Black children were enslaved, auctioned away from the arms of their parents, and functionally re-enslaved in the Jim Crow era through apprenticeship agreements, giving their free labor in return for “training.” Even where schools for Black children existed, sharecropping families often could not afford to send them because their labor was needed to meet the demands of land-owners.

The response to child labor and the racial divide therein exposed that for many people, the question was not whether children should be exploited, but only which children were exploitable. The news that southern textile mills employed child labor, though mainly white children, was sensationalized in the North as racialized “white child slavery.”

When the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) of 1938 was enacted, it prohibited child labor in factories but exempted the agricultural industry from child protections, ending the “white child slavery” in factories but allowing similar conditions to continue for children of color in the fields. Shortly thereafter, in 1942, the United States created the Bracero Program, a temporary guestworker program, officially for Mexican men. The goal was to provide cheap farm labor, while deterring undocumented immigration and the permanent settlement of Mexicans within the United States. Women and children were officially excluded from the program, because it was thought they would encourage permanent settlement.

Nevertheless, families were regularly present in Bracero camps, working in the fields with husbands and fathers. Thus a new community of color emerged again to do the grueling agricultural labor, whose children were not protected from working in the fields.

This dynamic continues today. Over 90% of farmworkers in the United States are persons of color—roughly 83% of farmworkers are Hispanic, 7% are Haitian, 6% are Indigenous, and 3% are African American. There is no reliable data on the ethnicity of child farmworkers. The Department of Labor’s statistics explicitly exclude children under 16 in the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and under 14 in the National Agricultural Workers Survey. The FLSA remains the primary federal law governing the employment of children, and the same exemptions exist that allow the continued exploitation of children, mostly children of color, as an underclass of society on farms across America. Conditions in states vary, depending on the strength and enforcement of state laws, but the same incentives exist for employers to hire children, and they will continue to do so until the law changes and prohibits them from doing so.

Current Federal Child Labor Laws Underprotect Child Farmworkers

The standard minimum age for non-agricultural employment is 16, and under the FLSA, youth under age 18 may not work in any occupation “particularly hazardous for the employment of children...or detrimental to their health or well-being.” Yet exemptions for agriculture allow children to work at age 12 and to perform hazardous work at age 16. The Secretary of Labor may permit employing children aged 14-16 in work that is not “oppressive,” that does not interfere with schooling, and is not detrimental to their health, but further agricultural exemptions with parental consent allow children to start working at younger ages in more hazardous environments. The Secretary of Labor may also issue Hazardous Occupation Orders, deeming certain work activities too dangerous for youth below a certain age. However, attempts to update these hazardous regulations failed during the Obama administration, ignoring recommendations from the National Institute for Occupational Safety, and leaving thousands of farmworker children vulnerable to performing farm tasks that are dangerous.

Agricultural work, of course, looked very different when the FLSA was enacted, but subsequent amendments did not keep pace with agricultural advancements. While modern machinery and the use of agrochemicals increased production on American farms, they also heightened the risks that farmworkers and farmworker children face.

Regulators discovered early on that it was difficult to enforce and verify compliance within industrial housework, and that often remains the case for agricultural workers, especially impoverished child migrant workers. State by state enforcement varies. Recent budget cuts to OSHA led to decades-high levels of workplace fatalities, decades-low workplace inspection rates,\textsuperscript{17} and overall reduction in compliance and safety officers.\textsuperscript{18}

For several years, U.S. Congresswoman Lucille Roybal-Allard has introduced and led efforts to pass The Children’s Act for Responsible Employment and Farm Safety [The CARE Act], which would close agricultural loopholes in the FLSA and increase protections for child farmworkers. This bill would raise the minimum age for agricultural child work, limit their working hours, and increase penalties for employers who violate the law. In the absence of federal action, our research shows that states have a vital role to play to protect child farmworkers.

and low family incomes force children to work for longer hours starting at earlier ages to help support the family. In an industry at the mercy of bad weather, drought, and natural disasters, and especially where farmworkers are paid by the piece, families are incentivized to bring to work as many children as they can, because the more they harvest, the more they earn. Even where farmworker children do not work, they may still be present in the field, exposed to the same dangers as their parents and siblings.

While employers are subject to federal child labor laws if they engage in interstate commerce or earn more than $500,000 per year, numerous exemptions treat child agricultural workers differently, and allow them to work at earlier ages, for longer hours, under more hazardous conditions. When school is out of session, children as young as twelve years old may legally work for unlimited hours on farms with parental permission. There is no minimum age to work on family farms or small farms.

Nevertheless, farm and farm labor companies have long been cited for child labor violations, from strawberry farms in Washington State to blueberry farms in Michigan, including suppliers to major supermarket chains Kroeger, Meijer, and Walmart. Because of these exemptions and subsequent violations, it is difficult to know to what extent food sold in grocery stores across America is the work of children, whether a 12-year-old harvesting fruits and vegetables in New York, a 9-year-old picking beans in Oregon, or a 10-year-old working on coffee plantations in Hawaii.

Children in migrant farmworker families face significant barriers to education. Seasonal migration patterns force children to start and stop schools across different states throughout the school year. In one year, farmworker children may be forced to attend up to four schools that operate on different course schedules and credit systems.

Lack of affordable housing and regulations around migrant farmworker housing may cause additional family disruption and relocation.

When children can attend school, they often must travel long distances. If they make it into the classroom, they may struggle to stay awake after working throughout the weekend. Fatigue, illness, and work-related injuries negatively impact their development and education. Migrant students interviewed report facing racism and xenophobia from teachers and fellow students.

As they spend more time working and commuting to school, students lose time to study and rest and are pressured to drop out to support their families. This unsurprisingly leads to social isolation and poor educational outcomes. This further leads to a 45%-60% high school dropout rate, and according to the Center for Farmworker Families, a high school graduation rate of only 10%. These barriers to education produce generations of children with uncertain futures.

Child Farmworkers

Agriculture is the most dangerous sector in which youth are allowed to work.\(^{41}\) Child farmworkers are exposed to many hazards on the job, including chemicals and pesticides, confined spaces, electrocution, environmental hazards, falls, organic dust, machinery, tractors, and being struck by equipment.\(^{42}\) The Department of Labor lists hazardous occupations and restrictions for youth under 18, but youth in agriculture may do these jobs at age 16 and sometimes even younger with certain exemptions. These jobs include driving tractors\(^{43}\) and ATVs,\(^{44}\) and operating chainsaws and other high-risk equipment,\(^{45}\) often unsupervised and without adequate training. Political pressure from farm lobbyists impedes the Department of Labor from updating its list of hazardous agricultural jobs.

While these are risks for all farmworkers, children are more vulnerable to significant injury because their bodies are still growing and developing, and they are often less aware of these risks. Pesticide exposure may lead to cancer, nervous system disorders, and infertility or sterility.\(^{46}\) Children’s bodies are also disproportionately exposed to pesticides compared to adults, because pesticide laws based on toxicity are written to protect adults’ bodies, not children’s bodies that have a higher surface to body mass ratio, and that are still developing.\(^{47}\)

“You could see the spray coming at you...but we kept on working. The next day I didn’t feel so good...I wouldn’t feel comfortable talking about pesticides to the owner or supervisor because they’ll see you as nagging. They just really want you to work.” -- Child Farmworker, North Carolina\(^{48}\)

Heavy lifting and repetitive standing and bending impact a child’s growing body disproportionately, leaving children more vulnerable than adults to muscle and joint problems and musculoskeletal injuries and disorders, including bursitis, tendonitis, carpal tunnel syndrome, and back problems, which may affect them throughout their lives.\(^{49}\) And especially at a young age, children are more vulnerable to heat exhaustion when they are less able to recognize these conditions.

Children as young as 13 have exhibited symptoms associated with acute nicotine poisoning, including “nausea, vomiting, loss of appetite, headaches, dizziness, skin rashes, difficulty breathing, and irritation to their eyes and mouths”, after handling tobacco plants and absorbing the chemical directly through their skin.

Tobacco fields pose additional unique risks, where merely handling the crop is a health hazard. Interviews conducted by researchers at Wake Forest University found that 16- and 17-year-olds working in tobacco fields in North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, and Virginia reported experiencing sickness and pain while tending to or harvesting leaves, and symptoms of acute nicotine poisoning such as nausea, vomiting, headaches, and dizziness.

“This painful stomach ache hit me. It was so strong that I was crying at night...And I started puking. I think I threw up three or four times that day. It was so painful.” -- Child Farmworker, North Carolina

A more comprehensive list may be found in our appendix. Open-source research of news articles, government agency investigations, and other publicly available reports identified at least one child in 49 states who was killed in a farm-related accident since 2000. Children’s ages ranged from 2 years old to 17 years old. Deaths caused by tractors and ATVs are included as farm related, because although they are driven for various purposes, they are commonly used in farm work, and experts explain that they represent a high risk of death and serious injury to farmworker youth. These are provided as examples and do not include all child farm-related deaths over this period, which happen once every three days nationwide.
Farm Work Regularly Injures and Kills Children

Every day, 33 children are injured on U.S. farms. In 2014, working youth had more than 4,000 work-related injuries. Over six years of surveys, there were more than 34,000 work-related injuries to working youth, 10.6% of whom were children under age 10, and more than half of whom were under age 16. These injuries include cuts and bruises to stabs and burns, and traumatic brain injury, dislocation, and amputation.

While the overall numbers of farm injuries are declining, injuries to youth on their parents’ farms have held steady. Approximately 60% of youth agricultural injuries are to children who are not working at the time. Almost three-fourths of those injuries are to working household youth.

More child workers in the U.S. die in agricultural work than any other industry. A child dies in an agriculture-related incident approximately every 3 days. Transportation incidents were the most common cause of fatal injury, primarily with tractors, especially those that are outdated and without rollover protection, and ATV/UTVs. Although only 6% of child workers are employed on farms, more than half of child work-related deaths are in agriculture.

Our Findings: State Child Labor Laws

The following is a summary of our findings after surveying the laws of the 50 states, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico. Detailed findings for each state, including citations to where these provisions may be found in state law and hyperlinks to public versions of those laws, are available in the appendix.

The information provided in this report does not, and is not intended to, constitute legal advice.

1. Minimum Age to Perform Agricultural Work

Federal law allows 12-year-olds to work full-time as child farmworkers, but any age to work part-time. States can increase those protections, but 22 states chose to go no further than the federal requirement. Our research shows the following:

- Twenty-two states allow any age of child to be a child farmworker.
- One state, Illinois, sets a minimum age of 10-years old.
- Twelve states set a minimum age of 12-years old.
- One state, Michigan, sets a minimum age of 13-years old.
- Sixteen states set a minimum age of 14-years old.

2. Maximum number of hours a child can work daily

All 52 jurisdictions have laws protecting children from work more than 8 hours a day. Still, half of jurisdictions (26) set no limit on the number of hours in a day a child farmworker under 16 can work in the fields (Delaware, District of Columbia, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Wyoming). Different states have different rules for different age groups and different times of year—for details on a particular state’s rules, please see the appendix entry for that state.

3. Maximum number of days per week that a child under 16 may work

Our research shows that most jurisdictions (36) allow children under 16 to work 7 days a week in the fields. The other 16 jurisdictions allow them to work 6 days a week.

4. Prohibited Night Work

All 52 jurisdictions have laws protecting children from working in the middle of the night, but roughly half of jurisdictions (23) do not extend these protections to child farmworkers (Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Louisiana, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska, Nevada, New Jersey, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia). Different states have different rules for different age groups and different times of year—for details on a particular state’s rules, please see the appendix entry for that state.

5. Monetary Fines for Violating Child Labor Laws

All jurisdictions have the ability to charge an employer a fine if they violate child labor laws, and all but one allow a fine for a first offense (Indiana gives a warning letter only). Additionally, five jurisdictions (Idaho, Kansas, Mississippi, Puerto Rico, West Virginia) have a warning fine of $100 or less for the first offense. Different states have different rules for different infractions of violating child labor laws, and many give different fines based on whether the employer is a repeat offender or whether a child is injured due to the infraction. For details on a particular state’s rules, please see the appendix entry for that state.

6. Criminal penalties for violating child labor laws

Most jurisdictions (36) make it a crime to violate child labor laws, however 16 jurisdictions do not. Two jurisdictions make it a felony for the first offense. Different states have different rules for different infractions of violating child labor laws and may make them different crimes based on whether the employer is a repeat offender or whether a child is injured as a result of the infraction. For details on a particular state’s rules, please see the appendix entry for that state.

* Please note that while some states may not make violating child labor laws a crime, they may make related offenses a crime, such as contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Please also note that many states have different types of misdemeanors and felonies. This table defines misdemeanor as a crime with a maximum penalty of less than a year behind bars, and a felony as a crime with a maximum penalty of more than a year behind bars. For details on a particular state, please see the appendix entry for that state.
Model Policy

The following model policy is based on the federal Children’s Act for Responsible Employment and Farm Safety (CARE Act), which is endorsed by at least 185 organizations, including several of America’s largest labor unions, child advocacy groups, farmworker support organizations, and civil rights groups, including the organizational authors of this report Lawyers for Good Government, the Child Labor Coalition, and the National Consumers League. The model policy below incorporates additional provisions based on best practice recommendations from other organizations, and consultation with leading child labor experts.

Section 1. Definitions.

1. “Oppressive agricultural child labor” means agricultural employment where:
   a. Any employee who is 16 or 17 years of age is employed in any occupation that involves performing a hazardous agricultural activity, or that is otherwise particularly hazardous for the employment of children between such ages or detrimental to their health or well-being;
   b. Any employee who is 14 or 15 years of age is employed by an employer, unless the employment is confined to periods which will not interfere with the schooling of the employee, and that the conditions of employment will not interfere with the health and well-being of the employee; or
   c. Any employee who is under 14 years of age is employed by an employer.

2. The provisions of subsection (1) shall not apply to any employee under:
   a. 18 years of age who is employed in agriculture by his or her parent, or by a person standing in the place of the parents, on a farm owned by the parent or person; and
   b. 16 years of age who is employed by his or her parent, or by a person standing in the place of the parent, in employment of a child 16 or 17 years of age or detrimental to their health or well-being.

3. “Hazardous agricultural activity” means:
   a. Any agricultural activity performed by any employee, that creates a substantial risk of serious injury or serious illness to any person, including but not limited to:
      i. Operating an all-terrain vehicle (ATV) or similar off-road vehicles;
      ii. Operating a tractor, forklift, or other heavy equipment;
      iii. Handling any part of a tobacco plant; and
      iv. Any task that requires:

65 This model policy is based on The CARE Act. Primary additions include a new definition of “hazardous agricultural activity” to explicitly protect children from agricultural occupations that have been shown to create a substantial risk to the health and safety of children, and a new heat illness prevention standard, which is based on state laws that have already been enacted on this issue.
1. handling pesticides, open containers of pesticides, or any equipment that may contain pesticide residues;
2. assisting with application of pesticides;
3. acting as a pesticide flagger;
4. performing tasks as a crop advisor during any pesticide application;
5. entering a treated area during an applicable restricted-entry interval; or
6. otherwise significant risk of pesticide exposure.

4. “Serious injury or serious illness” means:
   g. Permanent loss or substantial impairment of the function of a bodily member, organ or mental faculty; or
   h. Permanent paralysis or substantial impairment that causes loss of movement or mobility or an arm, leg, foot, hand, or other body part.

Section 2. Oppressive Child Labor Prohibition

No employer shall employ oppressive agricultural child labor, nor produce, manufacture, deal, ship, or deliver for shipment any goods produced where the employer knew or reasonably should have known that oppressive child labor was employed.

Section 3. Penalties

1. Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall upon conviction be subject to:
   a. a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $15,000 for each employee who was the subject of such a violation, or to imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both; or
   b. a fine of not less than $15,000 and not more than $60,115 with regard to each such violation that results in the serious injury, serious illness, or death of any employee under the age of 18 years, which may be doubled where the violation is a repeated or willful violation, or to imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

Section 4. Reporting Requirements

1. The [State Department of Labor] shall annually collect and analyze data concerning children under the age of 18 who are employed in agriculture, and each work-related injury, illness, or death of any such child.
2. The [State Department of Labor] shall annually submit to the [State Legislature] and publish on its website a report which shall include:
   a. A summary of the data collected under this section;
   b. An evaluation, based on such data, that reflects the status of child labor and related safety and health hazards; and
   c. Any information, based on such data, that leads the [State Labor Commissioner] to believe that children under 18 years of age may have been employed in violation of this section.
3. Any employer shall submit a report to the [State Labor Commissioner] no later than 5 days thereafter when the employer is involved in any event related to:
   d. A work-related serious injury to an employee under 18 years of age employed in agriculture;
   e. A work-related serious illness of an employee under 18 years of age employed in agriculture; or
f. A work-related death of an employee under 18 years of age employed in agriculture.

4. The report in subsection (3) of this section shall at a minimum include:
   a. The name and address of the employer,
   b. The name, address, and age of the employee,
   c. Details relevant to the incident, to include environmental hazards, chemical or pesticide exposure, use of machinery or tools at the time of the incident, work tasks performed at the time of the incident, and other details relating to the incident; and
   d. Such other information as the [State Labor Commissioner] may by regulation prescribe.

Section 5. Failure to Report

1. Any employer who fails to file a report as required under Section 4 of this title may be assessed a civil penalty of not less than $500 and not more than $7,000 per violation.

Section 6. Employer Written Procedure Requirement

1. Each employer who employs agricultural workers under age 18 shall develop and implement written procedures to comply with the provisions of this title.

Section 7. Heat Illness Prevention

1. Employees shall have access to potable drinking water that is fresh, pure, suitably cool, and provided to employees free of charge. The water shall be located as close as practicable to the areas where employees are working. Employers shall provide water in sufficient quantity to allow employees to drink one quart or more of water per hour. Employers shall encourage employees to drink water frequently.

2. Shade
   a. Shade that is open to the air or provided with ventilation or cooling shall be present when the temperature exceeds 80 degrees Fahrenheit. Employers shall provide timely access to shade upon an employee's request when the temperature does not exceed 80 degrees Fahrenheit.
   b. Employees shall be allowed a preventative cool-down rest in the shade for a minimum of five minutes per hour.
   c. Where the employer can demonstrate that it is unsafe or infeasible to have shade present on a continuous basis, the employer may utilize alternative procedures that provide equivalent protection.
   d. Employees who experience symptoms of heat illness shall not be ordered back to work until any symptoms of heat illness have abated, and shall be provided timely appropriate first aid or emergency response.

3. The [State Labor Commissioner] shall develop and adopt regulations that require employers to train supervisors and employees to protect employees from heat-related illness caused by heat stress.

Section 8. Rulemaking

1. The [State Labor Commissioner] may prescribe any rule as necessary to implement the provisions in this title.
Appendix: The State of Child Farmworker Law in the 50 States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico

The following appendix is a survey of the laws of the 50 states, DC, and Puerto Rico on the following questions:
1. What is the minimum age to perform agricultural work?
2. What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily?
3. What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work?
4. Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages?
5. What are the fines for violating child labor laws?
6. What are the criminal penalties for violating child labor laws?

The information provided in this report does not, and is not intended to, constitute legal advice.

The appendix includes citations along with hyperlinks to where in the law these provisions reside, to show how simple it would be to change these laws to protect farmworker children. A motivated advocate in a state could encourage a lawmaker to simply change the minimum age to perform agricultural work. Or take a law that protects all children except child farmworkers and remove the exception or limit the exception to family farms.

The appendix also includes examples of farm-related deaths. Open-source research of news articles, government agency investigations, and other publicly available reports identified at least one child in 49 states who was killed in a farm-related accident since 2000. Children’s ages ranged from 2 years old to 17 years old. Deaths caused by tractors and ATVs are included as farm related, because although they are driven for various purposes, they are commonly used in farm work, and experts explain that they represent a high risk of death and serious injury to farmworker youth. These are provided as examples and do not include all child farm-related deaths over this period, which happen once every three days nationwide.
Alabama

In November 2019, a 4-year-old girl died after being run over by a tractor in Fruithurst, Alabama. In April 2004, a 17-year-old Alabama youth, Elizandro Martinez, died at a poultry plant. He fell onto a conveyor belt that carries live chickens into the plant to be processed.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Eight hours on a non-school day and three hours on a school day if under 16 years old. See Ala. Code § 25-8-36(a).
3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? A child between the ages of 14 to 15 may not work more than 6 days per week. See Ala. Code § 25-8-36(b).
4) Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages? Yes. 14 or 15 years of age: not before 7:00 a.m. or after 9:00 p.m. during school summer vacation. During the time school is in regular session: 14 or 15 years of age not before 7:00 a.m. or after 7:00 p.m. (b) 16, 17, or 18 years of age: not between 10:00 p.m. and 5:00 a.m. on any night preceding a school day. Exemptions may be granted by the appropriate county or city superintendent of schools, or where there is no superintendent, the school headmaster. See Ala. Code § 25-8-36.
5) What are the fines for violating child labor laws? $1000 to $5000 if violating provisions about use of machinery or vehicles, otherwise $0 to $300. See Ala. Code § 25-8-59.
6) What are the criminal penalties for violating child labor laws? First conviction is a Class C misdemeanor (up to 3 months) or Class A misdemeanor with serious physical injury or death (up to 1 year). Second conviction is a Class B misdemeanor (up to 6 months) or Class C felony with serious physical injury or death (1 to 10 years). See Ala. Code § 25-8-59.

Alaska

In 2009, Matthias Martin, a 9-year-old boy in Kenai, Alaska, died after being dragged by a cow while attending to livestock.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Nine hours of combined school attendance and employment time if under 16 years old. See Alaska Stat. § 23.10.340.
3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? A child under the age of 18 may not work more than 6 days per week. See Alaska Stat. § 23.10.350(a)(1).
4) Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages? Yes. A minor under 16 years of age may not work between 9 p.m. and 5 a.m. See Alaska Stat. § 23.10.340.
6) What are the criminal penalties for violating child labor laws? Misdemeanor, up to 90 days. See Alaska Stat. § 23.10.370.
Child Farmworkers

Arizona

In 2011, a 5-year-old boy was run over by a tractor and killed.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Eight hours on a non-school day and three hours on a school day if under 16 years old. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 23-233(A).

3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? No maximum. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 23-233.

4) Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages? Yes, cannot employ persons under 16 at night, where night is defined as 9:30 p.m. when school is in session, 11 p.m. when it is not, until 6 a.m. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 23-233.

5) What are the fines for violating child labor laws? A cease and desist order that shall include a civil penalty of not more that $1000. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 23-236.

6) What are the criminal penalties for violating child labor laws? Class 2 misdemeanor (up to 4 months). See Ariz. Rev. Stat. § 23-239.

Arkansas

In 2016, a 9-year-old boy died in Fouke, Arkansas, after getting tangled in rope and trampled by a horse. In 2019, a 3-year-old boy in Melbourne, Arkansas, was run over by a tractor and killed.

1) What is the minimum age to perform agricultural work? 14. See Ark. Code § 11-6-104.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Eight hours if under 16 years old, or ten hours if 16 years old. See Ark. Code § 11-6-108.

3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? A child under the age of 17 may not work more than 6 days per week. See Ark. Code § 11-6-108, § 11-6-110.

4) Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages? Under the age of 16 years of age: not before 6:00 a.m. or after 11:00 p.m. Exemptions determined by rule of the Division of Labor. See Ark. Code §§ 11-6-108, 11-6-110.

5) What are the fines for violating child labor laws? $50 to $1000 per violation. See Ark. Code § 11-6-103.

6) What are the criminal penalties for violating child labor laws? None specific to child labor. See. Ark. Code § 5-27-209.
California

David Yenni, a 13-year-old was killed in a grain loading accident at a Petaluma, California mill in August 2009. The boy, who was working with his father, climbed on top of an open trailer for unknown reasons just as the father was emptying it into an underground storage tank. Somehow, he became trapped in the funneling material. Would-be rescuers were able to grab his arm but could not free him from the grain until it was too late.

In May 2008, Maria Isabel Vasquez Jimenez, a 17-year-old farmworker, died of heat stroke after working nine and a half hours in a California vineyard as temperatures hovered in the mid-90s. Jimenez was pregnant at the time. According to the United Farm Workers and the girl’s family, the labor contractor in the vineyard ignored California laws that require workers to be given breaks and provided with shade. Workers also said they were not given adequate amounts of water.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Eight hours on a non-school day and three hours on a school day if under 16 years old. Eight hours on a non-school day (or ten hours during peak harvest season if employed by an exempted agricultural packing plant) and four hours on a school day if 16 years old or older. See Cal. Lab. Code §§ 1391.

3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? 6. See Cal. Lab. Code § 551.

4) Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages? (1) a minor 15 years of age or younger: not before 7 a.m. or after 7 p.m., except that from June 1 through Labor Day, a minor 15 years of age or younger may be employed until 9 p.m. in the evening. (3) a minor 16 or 17 years of age: not before 5 a.m., or after 10 p.m. on any day preceding a school day. However, a minor 16 or 17 years of age may be employed for the hours authorized by this section during any evening preceding a non-school day until 12:30 a.m. of the non-school day. See Cal. Lab. Code § 1391.

5) What are the fines for violating child labor laws? $5000-$10000 or $500-$1000 for failure to keep employment eligibility paperwork on file and available for inspection or violations related to employment in the entertainment industry. See Cal. Lab. Code § 1288.

6) What are the criminal penalties for violating child labor laws? Misdemeanor, up to 6 months. See Cal. Lab. Code § 1303.
Colorado

In May 2009, Cody Rigsby, a Colorado 17-year-old was working in a grain bin when he vanished. It took rescuers six hours to find his body. Kelsey Helen Graves, age 13, died in Fort Collins, Colorado in July 2012, when she was cleaning a filter on an irrigation system and was electrocuted. She was working on her family farm.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Six hours on days before a school day and eight hours on all other days if under 16 years old. Twelve hours if employed in farm work and paid by the piece (i.e., not paid by the hour). See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 8-12-105.

3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? No maximum. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 8-12-105.

4) Is night work prohibited for certain hours and certain ages? No minor under the age of 16 shall be permitted to work between 9:30pm and 5am. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 8-12-105(3).

5) What are the fines for violating child labor laws? $200 to $500 for the first offense or only offense within 6 months, $500 to $1000 for a second offense within 6 months, $1000 to $10000 for a third offense within 6 months. See Colo. Rev. Stat. § 8-12-115(b).

Connecticut

In 2004, 12-year-old Vincent Graves was killed after falling off and being accidentally run over by a farm tractor.

2) What is the maximum number of hours a child can work daily? Eight hours if under 18 years old. See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 22-13.

3) What is the maximum number of days per week that a child may work? A child that is 14 or 15 years of age may not work more than 6 days per week, unless employed in agriculture by members of his immediate family. See Conn. Gen. Stat. § 22-13, § 22-16.
